2008 Seminar Series

Impressions of Freiburg

The city of Freiburg in southern Germany has become a byword for sustainable urban policy, notably the promotion of solar power. Outside its largely car-free historic centre it has promoted several new innovative low-energy, and low-emission, suburbs with a strong community focus. Tony Hall recently visited Freiburg and will present his own illustrated, critical account of what he saw.

Tony Hall has been a practising planner, a planning academic and a local councillor in Chelmsford, England. He is now an adjunct professor with the Urban Research Program.
