

Learning through making music

Male Voices

Stories of boys learning through making music

Editor Scott D Harrison

ACER Press 2009

Male Voices is filled with stories of boys and men participating in the creation of music. It brings together leading thinkers and practitioners in the field of music from the conductor of the award-winning, mould-breaking Birralee Blokes, Paul Holley, who comments on the phenomenal success of his choir, through to internationally recognised scholars, Dr Scott Harrison and Dr Bob Smith, who bring research into adolescent participation and indigenous music-making respectively. This book offers a variety of viewpoints. Academics help to position the study of male engagement in music throughout the life cycle, while teachers in private and state schools across the country offer their views alongside those of professional musicians.

The book also focuses on the interface of technology and music, instrumental music, and how music contributes to academic skills, social interaction and life skills. From the banks of the Yarra to remote communities of the Far North, Male Voices presents a diverse range of experiences, with parents, teachers, musicians, men and boys offering perspectives on their experience of music, for the benefit and understanding of others.

"From the earliest time I can remember, singing has been second nature to me, like breathing. I will be forever grateful to my teachers, mentors and fellow artists, (who) showed me through their passion and love of music that it could be the most honourable and fulfilling way to not only make a living, but also make a contribution to the world we live in. Music has given me the opportunity to leave a legacy, which I know this book will also serve, for many years to come."
