The Centre for Work, Organisation and Wellbeing

with support from the Griffith Business School

invites you to a seminar

“Now What? Choosing a career after your doctorate program”

When: 10.30am - 12pm, Wednesday 1st July, 2009
Where: Room 0.06, Building N16 (Macrossan), Nathan Campus
Lunch: Please RSVP with any dietary restrictions

The centre for Work Organisation and Wellbeing invite you to a panel discussion that answers the question that every Doctoral Student will ask at some stage in their candidature – What am I going to do when I finish my doctorate? The panel consists of recent graduates who chose a range of careers.

Each speaker will be given 5 minutes to answer the following questions.

- How did you get your first job post doctorate?
- What were the key elements to you getting this job?
- Why did you choose this job?
- What have you enjoyed about your job?
- What difficulties have you encountered?

Speakers:

An overseas academic career: Dr Paul Harvey is an Assistant Professor at the University of New Hampshire. Paul graduated from the University of Southern Florida and has been published in some of the leading journals in the world including Academy of Management Review, Organizational Dynamics and the Journal of Organizational Behavior.

The Australian academic career: Dr Herman Tse is a recently appointed Senior Lecturer in the Griffith Business School. Herman initially accepted an appointment as a lecturer at the University of Newcastle. He won the prestigious Kenneth E. Clark Student Research Award at the Centre for Creative Leadership, in the USA and has gone on to publish in leading journals such as Leadership Quarterly and the Journal of Organizational and Occupational Psychology.

The research career: Dr Sandra Lawrence is a Post Doctoral Fellow in the Centre for Work Organisation and Wellbeing at Griffith University. Sandra has worked in a number of research roles at Griffith University and the Queensland University of Technology. She has published in A* journals such as the Journal of Applied Psychology and the Journal of Vocational Behavior.

The Industry Career: Dr Sally Russell has recently been appointed as a Lecturer in the Griffith Business School. Following the completion of her doctorate at the University of Queensland, she accepted a position at CSIRO to work with the Urban Water Security Research Alliance. Sally has been active in the international researcher in the Organization and the Natural Environment division of the Academy of Management and has published in journals such as Current Issues in Tourism and Business Strategy and the Environment.

RSVP/General Enquiries Phone: (07) 3735 3714 Email: wow@griffith.edu.au