Just as textile mills and automotive assembly plants have symbolized previous economic eras, the call centre stands as a potent reminder of the importance of information in contemporary economies. Bob Russell's Smiling Down the Line theorizes call-centre work as info-service employment and looks at the effects of ever-changing technologies on service work, its associated skills, and the ways in which it is managed. Russell also considers globalization and contemporary managerial practices as centres are outsourced to poorer countries such as India and as new forms of management are introduced, refined, or discarded.

Invoking extensive labour force surveys and interviews from Australia and India, Russell examines employee representation, work intensity, stress, emotional labour, and job skills in the call-centre work environment. The cross-national approach of Smiling Down the Line highlights the effects of globalization and scrutinizes the similarities and differences that exist in info-service work between different industries and in different countries.

Bob Russell is an associate professor in the Department of Employment Relations at Griffith Business School, Griffith University.

Using original material on call centres in India and Australia, Smiling Down the Line offers important insights on the nature of work and employment in contemporary capitalism. Bob Russell's exploration of call centres moves forward key debates on topics such as the organization and transformation of globalized work, workplace technological change, managerialism, and the evolution of an information-based economy. This excellent book is a must read for academics, researchers, and students in sociology, labour studies, industrial relations, management studies, women's studies, and political economy.
