The Excellence for Research in Australia (ERA) initiative has changed the research environment by placing a greater premium on academic researchers achieving publications in high quality outlets. Submissions to A* and A journals have ballooned, and as a result competition for space in these outlets has intensified. Irrespective of whether you are an early career, mid career, or experienced researcher, increasing the chances of getting your research published in high quality outlets requires a publication strategy.

This workshop focuses on various strategies for targeting quality publication outlets and considers a stage-by-stage approach, from project conception to preparation, to submission, to dealing with feedback, and re-submission.
