The Centre for Work, Organisation and Wellbeing invites you to a workshop

Publishing Strategies for Researchers

Where: N29_Theatre4
When: Monday 27th October – 2.00pm – 3.00pm

In this workshop Professor Baruch will run an interactive session that will promote discussion around publication strategies. Professor Baruch will give a short presentation drawing on his vast experience as a reviewer as an editor and as a researcher describing how research gets published. The session will then move to an interactive session which focuses on answering questions around publishing research.

This session will be of interest to all researchers interested in publishing in quality journals.

Yehuda Baruch is a Professor of Management at Norwich Business School, UEA Norwich UK and formerly a Visiting Professor at the University of Texan at Arlington, USA and a Visiting research Fellow at London Business School. He holds a B.Sc. in Electronic Engineering (Ben Gurion, Israel), M.Sc, in Management and Behavioural Sciences (The Technion, Israel). After being a project manager in the high technology industry he encounter career in the academia. He teaches graduate and undergraduate courses in the areas of organisational behaviour and human resource management. His research interests are Global and Strategic HRM, Careers and technology impact on management. He published over 80 refereed papers in a number of journals, including Human Resource Management, Organisational Dynamics, Journal of Vocational Behaviour, Human Relations and Organization Studies. The author of Managing Career: Theory and Practice and co-editor of Wining Reviews: A guide for Evaluating Scholarly Writing and Opening the Black Box of Editorship, as well as over 25 book chapters. Professor Baruch is the editor of group & Organization Management, former editor of Career Development International and served as the Chair for the Careers Division of the Academy of Management.

RSVP: to Pamela.Brown@Griffith.edu.au to assist with numbers