Career options: Government and International Relations

Whether you are determined to make a difference in your own community or have your sights set on the international arena, this degree will give you the in-depth understanding and skills you need to navigate the political environment. It provides a window into all the drama and passion of power in the modern world and the factors and forces that shape contemporary international affairs. You will be taught by internationally-awarded public policy researchers and practitioners from Griffith's School of Government and International Relations and learn the skills critical to thrive in government, business and society.

Whether your interests lie in US foreign policy or following Australian politics, this degree will expand your horizons and prepare you for a vast range of careers in government and non-government organisations, both in Australia and overseas. In addition to developing a comprehensive knowledge of political institutions and processes, business-government relations and foreign policy and globalisation, you will have the option to specialise with a major in International Relations of Asia or Politics and Public Policy or supplement your studies with a specialisation. Your studies will culminate with either a parliamentary internship or work placement, allowing you to further develop your skills and networks before you graduate.

You can look forward to a stimulating career in government, business, the community or media. There are opportunities for graduates to work in a range of fulfilling and challenging roles including providing advice to government and business leaders, developing policy and managing programs with domestic and international organisations in a variety of areas. These include economic, environmental and social policy, diplomacy and strategic analysis and trade relations.

In addition to knowledge and skills directly related to your program of study, you will also develop a range of other skills (e.g. teamwork, analytical, communication) through academic study, employment, voluntary work, sporting activities and life experience. Recognising the value employers place on these skills is an important factor in your graduate job search.

Targeting potential employers
Many work opportunities are not advertised. It is common practice for jobseekers to search out these opportunities. When approaching potential employers, conducting research to identify links between your selling points (your skills, experience, interests and qualifications) and an employer’s needs, increases your chances of success. Research will also reduce the number of approaches you need to make, saving you time in the end. Developing and using your personal and professional networks is also a valuable tool in finding these ‘hidden’ opportunities.

Department of the Prime Minister and Cabinet Graduate Program
The Department of the Prime Minister and Cabinet’s primary role is to support the Prime Minister, the Cabinet Secretary and the Cabinet, and to achieve a coordinated and innovative approach to the development and implementation of government policies. The key matters we deal with include:

Policy advice and administrative support to the Prime Minister – We provide strategic advice to the Prime Minister and the Cabinet Secretary on a range of issues including all matters considered by Cabinet. We have a particular responsibility for policy coordination across government, working with central and line agencies to ensure the advice given is sound and well-coordinated.

Assistance to the Cabinet, its committees and the Federal Executive Council – We provide support for meetings of the Cabinet and the Federal Executive Council that aid in decision-making.

Coordination of government administration

We are the primary source of advice on machinery of government matters and interaction between the parliament and public service.

Intergovernmental relations – We actively advance cooperation between the Australian Government and other governments in Australia through the Council of Australian Governments (COAG).

Government ceremonial and hospitality – We provide high-level support for major events, such as visits by Heads of State, ceremonies and State occasions.

Australian honours and symbols policy – We are responsible for policy advice, operational support, and for raising awareness about the Australian honours system and national symbols.
The Opportunity
We offer:
*a unique, fast-paced environment with exposure to high-profile and challenging work
*a Diploma of Government and credit points towards additional study *competitive salary packages including generous superannuation *four weeks annual leave and flexible hours *tailored professional development opportunities, and *strong support networks.

We Want You!
We look for the best graduates across all disciplines and life experiences. Our graduates:

*are intelligent with strong academic qualifications *excel at research and analysis of information and are not afraid to be innovative *write and speak well *have excellent interpersonal skills and;
*are responsive, enthusiastic and willing to learn.

Office of the Public Service Commissioner (OPSC) The role of Graduate Policy Officer has been designed to develop policy skills which will benefit the sector as a whole, by providing developmental opportunities which give the potential to advance within the Queensland Public Sector. As a Graduate Policy Officer, you will gain experience in a broad range of policy areas during multiple agency placements, dealing with a range of whole-of-government policy development issues while undertaking the following duties:

*A range of research activities and assisting in the development of policies and other initiatives
*Preparing policy briefings, reports and correspondence
*Participating in meetings and provide support to implement relevant outcomes
*Liaising on policy and procedural issues at a variety of levels in government and externally, and *Participating in multidisciplinary work teams involved in policy development and implementation.

This work experience, combined with formal training and personal development will equip Graduates with the knowledge, skills and ability to integrate easily into the mainstream of departmental operations.

AusAID provides aid to approximately 70 countries, with a strong focus on the Asia-Pacific region. Our staff specialise in, and provide expert advice on, areas of critical importance to developing countries, such as: health, education, infrastructure, agriculture, law and order, governance, the environment and economic growth.

Your role as an AusAID employee
Working for AusAID gives you a unique, first-hand insight into international diplomacy issues affecting developing countries. Your role as an AusAID employee could be as diverse as:
· preparing submissions and briefings on international development issues for the Minister for Foreign Affairs;
· representing AusAID and the Australian Government at international meetings or seminars;
· providing policy advice on economic growth, education, environment, gender, governance, health HIV/AIDS, pandemics, human rights, infrastructure, regional stability, rural development and water;
· providing support to the regional programs of Papua New Guinea, South Asia, East Asia, the Pacific, Africa and the Middle East;
· monitoring aid effectiveness (including impacts and outputs of policies and programs);
· managing relationships with non-government organisations and multilaterals such as the United Nations Children’s Emergency Fund and the World Health Organisation; · providing disaster relief support and advice to AusAID officers posted overseas following a humanitarian crisis or disaster; or · supporting the agency in its delivery of the aid program through corporate functions such as human resources, financial management, property management, information services and public affairs.

What we’re looking for
Graduates for either corporate or program and policy areas of the agency who possess:
· exceptional analytical and research skills;
· strong interpersonal, written and oral communication skills;
· cultural sensitivity and an awareness and interest in other cultures;
· initiative, drive and the highest professional and ethical standards;
· commitment to, and a keen interest in, development; and
· a commitment to working for the Government

Eligibility
At minimum:
· a three-year university degree,
· a keen desire to work in the Aid Program, and · Australian citizenship.

Research Officer – Leading Commercial Law Firm

This is an opportunity to join one of Australia's leading commercial law firms and to be part of the support team in providing research on Government and Regulatory Affairs.

The position of researcher would suit a junior policy officer or recent graduate of a political or economics study. It involves monitoring the introduction of legislation in the Commonwealth and Legislative Assembly, following and analysing the development of Government policy, tracking press releases and monitoring the Hansard.

The role involves maintaining a watching brief over the media for information of significance to the firm and the partners and to ensure that the information is passed on to the employees of the organisation. Required is an understanding of Commonwealth and ACT legislative and policy processes, a high standard of written and verbal communication, strong analytical skills and experience using a variety of research tools such as the Internet. No legal experience is required for the role.
