AUSTRALIAN REPAIR NETWORK

Australian Repair Network brings together a wide range of stakeholders interested in or working in the repair sector, who genuinely want to engage in open and respectful dialogue; with industry, other sectors and the community at large about the legislative and policy changes that are being developed to respond to the international right to repair movement.

What we do

We engage with all levels of government, policy makers, industries, repairers and the community to facilitate the need for a right to repair in Australia. We recognise the complexity of the wide range of interests involved in ensuring the longevity of a range of goods, machinery and equipment. We work closely with universities and resource institutions on priority themes related to repair, durability and product life extension.

Why we do it

We believe that education, dialogue, and exchange is fundamentally important to ensuring our society recognises the social, environmental and economic benefits of repairability and the role it can play in creating a sustainable future for Australia. We encourage you to become involved: make contact, follow our research and initiatives, and remain connected for the latest Australian Repair Network updates and news.
